Construction projects involve complex financial transactions, and disputes that can arise from them can be costly and time-consuming. In such cases, accounting and financial experts play a critical role in resolving these disputes. Project delays, unexpected costs, and business interruptions can all lead to construction litigation in which financial and accounting experts are called on to assess and determine damages. In addition to financial and accounting skills, these experts must have a solid knowledge of the construction environment as well as the ability to present complex financial information and accounting terms clearly to the trier of fact and other parties.

Weaver's team of seasoned professionals understand the construction business. They know how to communicate findings in clear and concise reports and testimony, based on reliable accepted methodologies. You can depend on them to prepare and evaluate complex construction damage claims effectively and efficiently.

Our professionals have advanced degrees and certifications in areas such as accounting (CPA), valuation (ASA, CVA), financial forensics (CFF, MAFF) and fraud investigation (CFE). This depth of talent allows us to assemble a qualified team who have the right skills and knowledge to address even the most complex construction disputes.
